BIOGRAPHY

Mathilde Rosier was born in 1973 in Paris. She lives and works in Burgundy, France.

Rosier's work stems from her interest in the physical and psychological experience of ancient rites and rituals.

Her research often embodies fictional offshoots or parts of a narrative, where constellations of self-made costumes, mystic representations of animals and nature often seem like props, an abandoned stage set, or solitary protagonists of an unfamiliar yet compelling reality.

Through the combination of painting, film, dance and theatre, Rosier constructs dreamlike situations that allow the beholder to lose any sense of space and time, opening a portal between conscious and unconscious realms.

Rosier creates art that comments on and illustrates the need to return to harmonious ways of integrating human activity with the "natural environment", including pre-industrial practices that might seem anti-rational, observing the world from the vantage of the present-day countryside.
